the nation.

Such was the gist of a lengthy state then made yesterday to President Wilson by Herbert C. Hoover, food controller, during a call at the White House, in the course of which the whole food situation was gone over by the two men.

Hoover went to the White House shortly after meeting committees composed of prominent churchmen from all over the country and from all denominations, called to frame plans for carrying on the food economy campaign. The committees decided that an energetic campaign for food conservation shall be launched immediately by the churches and through the church publications. The plan is to secure from the head of each family in the congregation a weekly statement of the work that family has done to conserve food during the week just and to the the congress is acting.
